"Wrath and Love," a thrilling war drama closes at this theatre today. It has struck a very popular appeal in its war theme. The audiences were stirred to great patriotic enthusiasm last evening by many of the martial scenes in the picture. The opening night was a record breaker. Edward Connelly sings at each performance. He makes a fine appearance. His voice is full, smooth and sympathetic, and he uses it with good judgment. His correct enunciation is one of his many charms.

PLAYMATICS. Where the willows dip and dream By the iris-bordered stream, Long ago we sat and played, Barefoot boy and nut-brown maid,

Idly poised the dragonfly On an arrow arum nigh, While the summer's sunlit skies Smiled within her azure eyes, Oft she caught, on each small hand. The "cat's cradle," where it spann Twixt my palms the narrow space, Bending down her eager face. Sometimes in the twilight hush, From the wood the hermit thrush Sent his bell-like, vesper call Through the dusk of evenfall, th, the day of long ago! Still the dimpling waters flow; Still beside the quiet stream. The gray willows dip and dream.

Oh, my little playmate, gone With the freshness of life's dawn, With its dews and faery gold. And its wonders manifold! Yesterday our casual feet Met within the crowded street, But I saw no greeting rise In your unsemembering eyes. James B. Kenyon, in the New York

SUCCESS AND DEFENAT. Success is the high endeavor,
It dwells in the heart that dares;
Success is the will that never
Gives up and never despeirs;
Success is the noble action
That lifts us up from the clod,
The joy and the satisfaction
That come to the child of God.

Defeat is the aim unsteady;
Defeat is the low weal;
It strikes on the hand unready.
It drags on the laggard heel;
Defeat is the undone dut.
It festers the heart that qualis,
It robe all truth of its beauty—
Alas for the man who falls! -Antony E. Anderson
